The American Toad

These chubby amphibians can be large, sometimes growing to 4 or 5 inches. They are usually brown, brick-red or olive-colored, with patterns of lighter colors, brown spots and bumps on their bodies.

They are found just about anywhere there is moisture and good cover. They are mostly active at night, eating insects, spiders, worms, snails, and slugs - just about anything that fits in their mouths. They lash out with long sticky tongues to grab prey.
