Sweet Certainty of Spring Springtime and me

I look up through the blossoms, the peach and apple trees around me are in bloom so pretty; violets of blue flutter in the spring breeze.

I see bluebirds a resting in a dogwood tree; redbirds and the robins on an old wooden fence that outlines the old farmhouse.

Earth smells of sweet fragrances of blossoms shaped like fruit of the vine; fragrance of Heavenly dew. You wake from your bed with Heavenly songbirds singing outside your window, this morning.

The gentle touch of spring, the blossoms light as the billowing air; the blue canopy skies looking down toward green Earth.

The spring has given birth. Everything comes alive brand new of springtime fresh and clean, the air is soft, and balmy grass growing so green. Red buds are swelling and in bloom, dogwoods budding flowers are finally here in bloom as they awaken from a long winter nap. I hear the bluebirds in song; little yellow trumpets blowing in the wind, daffodils heralding in spring time, waltzing in a breeze. Sunbeams gaily dancing upon the newly-leaved trees; jonquils in their bonnets, tulips unfolding pink and white blossoms against the blue sky, fluffy clouds and sunshine lit mountains towering so high.

Rainbows after spring rain, a thunderstorm wealth of splendor by our Father's hand, lifts our hearts to Heaven, giving Him in praise, rejoicing in our blessing of springtime. I'll go take a spring walk to mountains and trails where I was raised, long walks up creek banks where crystal water runs so freely, water ripples softly and low, creeping over rocks still so cold, grass like velvet so green.

The birds pause in the fragrant cooling breeze. They are seeking to land in silvery willows to make it their home. Butterflies, crickets, moss green frogs, fish in the creek, crawfish I saw today on my trip. Small seeds will grow, I do believe in miracles of Spring.

Spring wraps me as a vine 'till body, mind and soul are well entwined. Awakened like earth, I am renewed, aroused by all of God's beauty. The Master has painted a masterpiece by the stroke of His hand, all colors; and beauty comes alive. It's called springtime, for all eyes to behold.

When the world is full of hardship and trouble and sorrows this past year, every family has been touched by so much lost. My heart breaks for everyone. I love them and am praying for them. We can find a glimmer of hope just outside with God's beauty. We know he is still in control, our lives are in God's hands, just like all the seasons and weather.

The sun seems to get a little warmer, trees that were lifeless take on new leaves. Farmers start work on the fields, planting their crops; the bees are buzzing, grass to cut. So many creatures seek shelter along my trail today, lacy ferns, violets, wild phlox, open fields where wild flowers grow, wild deer and turkeys run free, little bits of spring popping up their heads, a patch of tulips.

No matter if days seem dark, God gives us light. When we're cold, He sends angels to clothe us; when we're hungry, there's someone to send food to us; there are angels all around, lending helping hands to show love and kindness. We are in this life we travel together. You're never alone. God is with us.

Listen, look, be still, He said we'd never be alone and he'd never forsake us, even to the end of time. I know sometimes we think we can't go on; then God sends angels your way. It might be a kind word, plate of food, drink of water, shelter from the storm. But, we are never alone. Spring is a sign everything is new, rebirth new day, new beginning. Beauty, flowers, sunshine, birds happy singing, building their nest.

Spring in all her glory comes shining through for you and me. I'm praying for everyone that's been through so much this past year. You know and God knows. I pray for all of you, I love you. Springtime is here and all its beauty for us all. Sweet certainty of springtime for us friends. God bless!
