“Magic by Miller” Book

Popular Mechanics and Popular Science monthly magazines carried articles by Joseph Dunninger, a mentalist and magician known as “The Amazing Dunninger,” and also displayed ads from magic distributors. Clarence ended up ordering a dozen or so tricks from Max Holden’s in Boston which he described as “the best” magic company. He bought his first Zombie doll while on a business trip to Chicago with his father.
A small library in his grandmother’s house had a book on magic which Clarence used to put on a magic show for which he charged the neighbors a 5 cents admission fee. He learned to hand sew (as well as crocheting) and sewing by machine from his grandmother which led him to make his first “Egg Bag Trick” in the 1940’s.
Salt Vanishing, Steel Ball Through Glass and Non-Rising Card were some of the magic tricks he made. Someone took his original “Non-Rising Card” which was made from a small cigar box.

He shared his interest in magic with another Irvine native, Amos “Butch” Critchfield, a butcher at the local A&P who later owned Critchfield Meats.
The first magician whom Clarence met personally was Preston who was from Eastern Kentucky and performed on a rotating basis as Preston the Magician and Preston the Hypnotist. Those of us who saw his shows can still remember the rows of fellow students who were convinced by the soothing voice of Preston that they were on an airplane, swaying back and forth with the motion of the plane.
Clarence says Preston was impressed by his Flip Over Box and the Non-Rising Card tricks. The elder magician made it possible for Clarence to become a member of the I.B.M. and S.A.M. magic societies while he was still a teenager.
Clarence first saw his future wife on the opposite side at an Estill-Irvine basketball game. He attended Irvine and she attended Estill, but he was able to meet her later and they married in 1950. He served stateside in the United States Marine Corps and did not do any magic for 30 years. His father operated a vending business and, from a young age, Clarence repaired any broken parts of jukeboxes and vending machines. They had a machine shop in the back of their store on Broadway and Clarence eventually re-discovered magic. He built his inventions and displayed them in a front window of the store until 1986 when fire destroyed the building and most of his magic inventions with it. Many of us still remember the “Drinking Bird” and other tricks displayed there.
Clarence made his magic tricks and sold them at shows without keeping any of them. He signed and numbered each trick he sold. He also documented and copyrighted his he made his magic trick but the cost to patent them was too expensive. So, some of his inventions were manufactured and sold by others. Clarence even helped some of them make the trick correctly. One man who had recreated Miller’s “Sponge Ball Box” couldn’t get it to work. “I put a spring in the bottom,” Clarence told him.

Two of the more fascinating tricks Miller made are the “Finger Chopper” and the “Arm Chopper.” Miller would put a carrot into the “Finger Chopper” and seemingly pull down the blade without cutting through the carrot. He urged onlookers to stick their finger in the hole where the carrot had been. The “Arm Chopper” worked in a similar manner, only it was much larger. A manufacturer declined mass producing the “Arm Chopper” because without a safety, he thought it was too dangerous.
Miller has made around a hundred magic tricks from made-up ideas. The idea for “Dollar Daze,” where a coin changes from a plain coin to a colorized one, came when Miller was handling vending machine money and noticed a Susan B. Anthony coin that had been colorized.

Ironically, of all the magic tricks Clarence made, he has kept only one, which has three dots that change color. But most of his tricks are featured in his new book called “Magic by Miller.” The 276 hard backed, gloss pages book has 437 photographs with over 300 in full-color, including many vintage local photos. It is and published and sold by Donald Croucher with a forward by Lance Burton and can be ordered online at www.PayPal.Me/MagicbyMiller/107. The cost is $95 plus $12.00 priority postage but is well worth it.
Miller has also donated a copy to the Estill County Public Library.
He also is a painter and proudly shows off a painting of the apostle St. Andrew that hangs in his dining room.

Clarence Miller’s book, “Magic by Miller” details how his made some of his magic inventions such as the “Arm Chopper” shown above.
