Beshear: No Criminal Charges in Estill County Landfill Case

Cabinet declines to authorize civil action by Attorney General

After conducting an exhaustive four-month investigation, the Office of the Attorney General has determined there is insufficient evidence to seek criminal charges in the disposal of radioactive waste at the Blue Ridge Landfill in Estill County, Attorney General Andy Beshear announced Friday, July 15, 2016.

While the office determined it could not pursue criminal charges, it believes the actions by Advanced TENORM Services and its owners violate civil law, Beshear said.

"Because of these flagrant violations and reckless disregard for the safety of the community, my office sought the necessary statutory consent from the Cabinet for Health and Family Services to pursue damages and penalties to the fullest extent of the law," Beshear said. "The cabinet declined our request, but has stated it plans to pursue such penalties on its own."

AG investigators reviewed hundreds of documents and held multiple interviews with state officials and with individuals directly involved in the disposal at the landfill of sludge from the oil and gas industry that contained Technologically

Enhanced Naturally Occurring Radioactive Materials or TENORM waste.

Beshear said his office will provide any support requested by the cabinet from his office's four-month investigation.

"As attorney general, protecting Kentucky families is my top priority," he said. "I want to therefore reassure our citizens that despite the inability to pursue criminal charges, my office encourages the cabinet to levy the harshest civil penalties available under Kentucky law against those responsible in this troubling case."
